Laminate Flooring

Laminate flooring is not real wood flooring. Wood-look laminates actually consist of an image of real wood under a clear finish, using the same technology found in laminate countertops. Laminate has come a long way in recent years. Many companies make laminate flooring that resembles many common wood types.

This type of flooring is durable, tough to damage or dent, and stain resistant. A disadvantage of laminates is that, once the top layer is worn down or damaged, it can't be sanded or refinished, it must be replaced. Laminate flooring can be much more cost effective than real hardwood for homeowners on a budget.

Laminate flooring, like prefinished hardwood requires much less mess, less installation labor and less time, because there is no sanding involved.

Laminate flooring can be installed and ready to live in again in days not weeks.
